

Twitter in the Sher

Monday, 20 April 2009

For years I rejected the whole micro/nanobloggery that was facebook-twitter, but after viewing kt's addiction -- she has 500+ "friends" on it and a habit that runs to the minutes-rather-than-hours-between use. So recently I relented on facebook. My twitter account became activated, active then hyperactive during the esri conference in Palm Springs. I don't consider myself to have an addictive personality but before I knew it I was checking twitter on the phone before and after flight etc. It had gone too far. Somehow, not seven days on from the onset of twitaddiction, I watched this take on the phenomenon and abruptly stopped. It was all a bit trashbathartley. But I suspect this is but a pause for @ppenn...

Lots and lots and lots of bambini photos, including Keystone Kiddiehaus fun in Summit County and a great slobbering Dr Evil Shot in Denver's Children's Museum.

If this isn't one of the most hilarious, on-the-money depictions by none other than weirdmeister David Lynch then, um, you haven't been where I wasn't.
